P R E F A C E

NEARLY twelve years ago (Christmas, 1886) I printed a small catalogue of English Proclamations, and in a few words of prefatory matter I made a promise, which I am now able to redeem.

I said then that I meant to print a list of Black Letter Ballads, and of Broad sides in prose and verse, which would form a continuation to the work, and that I would defer any remarks on the subject until I was able to combine the two together.

Changes of view advance with the lapse of time, and my little catalogue of Proclamations has grown from some 130 pages to three folio volumes; the Ballads in Black Letter have been issued, and at last the British Broad sides are completed and now offered to my friends.

The arrangement adopted here is, I think, the only satisfactory one—the chronological order—provided always that a good index of all sorts of information is provided by the compiler.

The only other catalogue of this nature that I am acquainted with is that of the collection in the library of the Society of Antiquaries, compiled by Mr. Robert Lemon, F.S.A.

The collection belonging to the Chetham Library has what is called a catalogue, or rather what might have been made into a good catalogue, provided the original manuscript had been cut up and arranged in some order or other, alphabetical, chronological, subject or what not ; but, as it is now, its only merit is that it is numerical.

I cannot pretend to rival the famous collection of the Society of Antiquaries, which possesses so great a number of early examples of printing, but it must be borne in mind that that collection was made many years ago, at a time when such matter was thought trash.

Even yet this class of bibliomania is caviar to the multitude, and I am often told that I waste time in collecting and arranging them. But I hold that these old prints are as worthy, in their way, of care and attention as any other branch of the library, and the getting them together has been of the greatest interest to me. Almost all of them reflect the opinion of the day on its special subject. Later on, the Broadside which was printed one day and lost the next was displaced by the pamphlet, the natural sequence of cheaper printing and paper, and greater facilities of distribution. That, however, has almost passed into desuetude in favour of the "letter to the local newspaper." The result is the same : if we wish to learn the popular thought on matters of imperial interest, or of the bad behaviour of the village sexton, we have always to go back in our researches to the humble Broadside or its more modern equivalent.

It is mainly for these reasons that this class of literature has laid so great a fascination upon me. I have not confined myself to our own islands, but I have followed my inclinations boldly on to the Continent, though with the exception of those printed in Rome (some 8000 of Ecclesiastical and Civil Government), I have directed my energies principally to what may be termed the period of the French Revolution and the various turmoils of Europe. In this subject, and that of the Roman issues, I think I may say that the collection is probably second to none. In due course these Foreign Broadsides will be taken in hand and issued.

It will be noticed that some of the more interesting entries in the following catalogue give as a note "See Facsimiles No. ." These reproductions I do not intend to issue with the catalogue itself as it would involve folding plates. Anything that seems to me of sufficient interest I have photographed full size, and I shall issue occasionally a portfolio of prints to illustrate my catalogues. When I printed my Ballads I had not thought of this, but I shall print a fly-leaf of those photographed, which may be inserted in the volume.

This series of Facsimiles may, in fact, be taken as the illustrations to the general catalogue of the library in both branches, manuscript and printed matter.

A word now as to the preservation of this collection. They have been dealt with in the same manner as the Ballads, i.e., each is mounted on a sheet of stout paper or card and ranged in its true chronological order in strong "book boxes."

I fully recognise that "laying down" on a mount is by many considered to be a thing that should be avoided if possible, but I hold that the well-being and safety of these flying sheets is so greatly enhanced as to outweigh the objections alluded to. If they were bound in volumes the mere diversity of size would render them awkward to use, and it would not be easy to insert fresh acquisitions in their proper place.

Mr. Edmond has dealt fully in his Introduction of the methods and rules adopted, and has at my request added a note drawing the attention of the reader to some of the more interesting features of the collection.

Agreeing with me as to the vital importance of the index, he has spared no pains to render it a key to the volume, and I hope that it will be found to others as satisfactory as it is to myself.

INDEX	401

INTRODUCTION.

IN the compilation of this catalogue certain rules have been adhered to as closely as possible, and it is well that they should be stated so that readers may know what they may reasonably expect to find when they consult it for any particular purpose.

In the first place, the broadsides included are in prose, or the prose occupies so prominent a position that its value was thought to be greater than any lines of verse, ballad, or other poetical effusion that they might contain. This rule has been laid aside in Nos. 6 and 8, two early broadsides in Latin verse, which seemed to find a more fitting place here than in a catalogue of English songs and ballads.

The broadsides are not necessarily written in English; to have imposed such a limitation would have excluded the interesting and rare Indulgence, No. 4, besides several academical pieces of a later date. However, it may fairly be claimed for all that they are either written in English, printed in some part of the British Empire, or have a distinct bearing on English history and institutions.

It has been a question of some difficulty to determine what constitutes a broadside. Some would limit this form of literature to single sheets of paper printed on one side only. In this collection a wider range has been taken by including prints of two pages. If this had not been done there would have arisen awkward points for settlement, as, for instance, where a printed docket is on the second page of the sheet, or where the sheet was printed on one side only, but on the second and third pages, or again, when the same broadside appeared in two editions, one printed only on one side of the paper and the other perhaps in larger type filling both sides. In fact, by this extension (if the use of such a term may be allowed) of the definition broadside or broadsheet, we obtain a much more satisfactory line of demarcation, beyond which lie the tracts. As the latter must have at least two leaves, or three printed pages, counting from the title-page onwards, there need be no mixing up of them with their more ephemeral neighbours, the broadsides. It is possible that some of the prints included in this collection may have had more than two pages when issued, but their presence must be apologised for as unintentional—in one case, at least, the fact was not discovered until too late.

The title-heading and imprint have almost invariably been printed exactly as in the original. Peculiarities of typography have been reproduced as far as possible, but beyond the use of capitals at the beginning of words where they occur, or of words which are printed entirely in capitals in the originals, no attempt has been made to reproduce the form or size of letter. To have introduced italics and several sizes of roman capitals would have certainly approached the ideal, but it is doubtful if the increased expenditure of time and money would have been justifiable. Where there was no title-heading proper, the opening words have been quoted, at sufficient length to ensure identification. Where no imprint is given, the probable place of printing and date have been placed within square brackets.

The mention of date recalls to mind a very important feature in the catalogue. As Lord Crawford in his preface has observed, the order is chronological, and he has justly remarked that it was the only satisfactory arrangement for such a work. But the most superficial examination of the entries will show that a very large proportion of the broadsides issued from the press without dates, or only with the year in which they were printed. It would, of course, have been comparatively easy to have grouped the undated entries roughly under periods or reigns, but a far more arduous task has been attempted, and that is to determine not only the year, but the month and even in many cases the probable day to which the broadsides belong. That is to say, we have had to discover from internal evidence to what particular event these undated sheets refer, and, from sources of information far too numerous to mention here, to decide the exact date to which they can be with probability assigned. These dates, in some instances, refer to the historical event recorded, in others to the date of the issue as a broadside of the record of that event. The compiler is perfectly aware that many of the dates so assigned may be called in question, but he can assure his future critics that no one can be more conscious of the defects of this particular part of the catalogue than he is, and it must be borne in mind that, with the exception of the catalogue of the collection in the library of the Society of Antiquaries, it is the first time a catalogue dealing with this class of literature and arranged chronologically has been attempted.

The remaining rules may be dismissed in a few lines. The sizes have been stated according to the watermarks, as folio, quarto or octavo. The term folio is used indiscriminately for one leaf of a sheet of paper which has been folded in two and cut apart, or for the whole sheet of paper, without folding, which was so commonly used for broad-sides. It is a matter of regret that the size in centimètres was not added, as that would have conveyed a more accurate impression to the mind than the form-size alone. The type has been indicated by B. L., for black letter, R. L., for roman letter; when italic letter is employed, or a mixture of different kinds, it is plainly stated. Woodcuts, borders, or other pictorial features are duly mentioned.

The short notes appended to a great many of the entries are for the most part simply explanatory of the purport of the broadside when such was not clearly indicated in the transcript of the title. In some cases these notes have been carried perhaps to undue length, but this inequality of treatment has arisen from the compilation having been carried on in spare moments over the lengthened period of seven years.

The "List of printers, publishers and booksellers" does not call for any comment beyond this—that the dates within which certain of the printers carried on business are not necessarily those of the broadsides in this collection, although all fall within the period named. These dates have been compiled from a corresponding list in the Catalogue of English Ballads issued by Lord Crawford, Mr. Gray's admirable Index to Hazlitt's series of Bibliographical Collections and Notes, and stray references to many catalogues and books on printing.

The index, without which a catalogue compiled and arranged like this would have been useless, is deserving of notice and explanation. It has been made as full as possible, perhaps some will say that many of the entries might very well have been spared, but all can be justified. It is a combined index of titles, authors, subjects, names of places or of persons mentioned in titles, and in many instances of events or names which occur either in the broadside itself, but not in the title, or which are introduced into the explanatory notes.

No pains have been spared to assist the literary toiler or historian. The large groups under such subjects as Ireland, Parliament, Scotland, William III., &c., will show at a glance the utility of such an index for purposes of research. It was considered that as so very large a proportion of the broadsides are anonymous the title entry was of paramount importance. The entry under the first word of the title, other than a date or place from which the writing was dated, has been strictly adhered to, even when it may to cataloguers or indexers appear to be absurd. When there is no title proper the opening words take the place of the title entry. The necessity for this has become so apparent to those using the collection, if for no other purpose than for the identification of duplicates, that apology seems superfluous. It has not always been an easy matter to determine whether the author of a sheet was really the person stated on it. Some are evidently satires; others, like the speeches of monarchs, can only be credited to them by courtesy. In order to establish a marked distinction, authors' names are printed in italics opposite the various pieces which they are thought to have written. These precede the broadsides, in which the person named may be either the subject or to whom allusion may be made in the title or explanatory note.

The spelling of place names, and also of personal names in certain cases, has been regulated by modern usage for the entry in the index under these names. In other places where they occur in the index, the spelling in the broadside, frequently amusingly phonetic, has been adhered to. Peers are entered under their family names, with cross references from their titles. Where only a single entry occurs opposite a peer's name the entries are in full under both family name and title. At the foot of each page of the index a "Key to Dates" will be found, which states the period within which the broadsides fall.

The period covered by the broadsides is a long one—close on 400 years. They are very unequally distributed over the various reigns, as will be seen by reference to the running headline. The scantiness of the earlier time may be accounted for in two ways. There is first the great rarity of broadsides printed in the time of the Tudor Kings and Queens, and of James I. To this reference has been made in the preface. But there is another element, and that is that the broadside in prose was not then so commonly employed as an ebullition of popular feeling. Their use gradually increased during the Civil War, and seems to have reached a culminating point in the reign of James II. After that date, although still numerous even during the reigns of the Georges, they may be said to be on the decline. With the increase of the number of newspapers and the greater liberty of the press during the last two reigns, they have almost ceased, except during the time of elections. This will be evident when we examine the collection, which is fairly representative of nearly the whole period from the Restoration to the present time.

It will be now convenient to refer to the most notable entries in the catalogue. The Indulgences (Nos. 1-4) have an especial interest as examples of early English printing. Two of them are believed to be from the press of Wynkyn de Worde; the others bear Pynson's name as the printer. It has been possible to determine the date of printing of No. 1 to be within the Pontificate of Julius II. (1503-1513), which the authorities of the British Museum were unable to do, as their copy seems to have been still more imperfect than that in the present collection, and the only clue to the probable date was the mention of Pope Alexander VI. in the opening words. Nos. 3 and 4 have, besides, a topographical interest, the former as being connected with Grey Friars' Monastery in Ipswich, and the latter with the Monastery of the Crutched Friars near Colchester.

The entries under the reign of Queen Elizabeth are "An Admonition" (No. 5), which was issued by Edmund Grindal, Bishop of London, on precautions against the spread of the plague; the verses (No. 6) by Théodore de Bèze, addressed to Queen Elizabeth, on the defeat of the Spanish Armada; and the "Golden Speech," an engraved sheet, which, although placed here, may have been published at a later date.

The only entry, deserving mention, which certainly falls within the reign of James I., is No. 8, the verses on the death of Théodore de Bèze by Robert Oliphant. This copy is important because of the manuscript note, in which the author states that he composed the lines at Geneva in the month of March, 1606. Being a Scot and accustomed to reckon the commencement of the year at 1st January, there is little doubt that the writer meant 1606 and not 1606-7.

The "Horn Book" (No. 11), which was probably printed about the year 1625, is one of the most important sheets in the collection. As Raban, who printed it, is known to have worked in Aberdeen from 1622 to 1649, this horn book, or rather horn books—for there are in reality four, all different, which have never been cut asunder for mounting on the wooden boards—are the earliest examples of this most rudimentary form of school-book, which can be dated with any degree of certainty.

In the time of Charles I., and during the Commonwealth, the majority of popular effusions appeared in the small quarto form. The broadside was, of course, always in use for the Proclamations, Ordinances and other sheets issued by the various authorities, but these belong to another class, yet to be dealt with in another catalogue. However, we have here some which are worthy of mention, particularly the "Injunctions" (No. 13), which is dated 1634 and is the earliest sheet in the collection dealing with Scotland. They were issued by authority of the Edinburgh municipality, and prescribe that four stablers are to be chosen and appointed postmasters, and a tariff fixed for horse-hire. Ireland and Irish affairs are referred to in Nos. 20, 21, 23, 25, 26 and 29. Three of these entries relate to the land, the others to the troubles in Ulster during 1641-2. The mutterings of discontent in England are not heard of until we come to No. 22, an interesting letter written by William Newton from the Hague, in which he tells of the visit of the Queen Consort of Charles I. to Holland. The attitude of the Dutch was certainly not encouraging to the Queen, who does not appear to have received the support which she hoped for. In No. 24 we have the first direct mention of the struggle between the King and the Parliament. The tone of His Majesty's speech is most kingly, and the fears he had expressed for his own safety, and which the Parliament declared to be trivial and groundless, were destined to be but too well founded. The march of events, fully displayed in the quarto news-sheets of the day during the Great Rebellion, is here but feebly reflected ; but, besides declarations, propositions, speeches and the like, we have in No. 32 the account of an engagement on 23rd August, 1642, at or near Coventry, which ended in a victory gained by the parliamentary forces under Lord Brooke. In No. 38 the battle of Selby is related, and in No. 46 the surrender of Colchester, in a letter sent by John Rushworth to Lenthal, the Speaker of the House of Commons.

Under the Commonwealth the most notable entries are found after the iron heel of Oliver Cromwell had been removed from the necks of the people. The intolerable tyranny of both Army and Parliament is seen in No. 60, where the Parliament is congratulated on having mastered the Army, and, in No. 61, a letter from General Monk, in which the Army is called upon to see that the Parliament put a legal period to their sitting. The letter to Monk (No. 66) is worth attention from the mention of the speech of that General, in which he so provoked the Parliament by fixing upon them a character in his speech "which the whole body of our language cannot equal, and they can never forgive or forget, for it will live as long as the name of Rump that spawn'd them."

With the Restoration we have, in Nos. 75, 77, 79 and 80, lists of the regicides; in No. 81 a curious "Catalogue of Pensioners in the Long Parliament;" and in No. 83 a list of those who died in defence of their king and country. Perhaps one of the most interesting groups is the very rare series, numbered consecutively from 89 to 99, of regulations issued by the Lord Mayor and the physicians during the year 1665, when London was visited with the plague. The notorious pair of judges, Sir William Scroggs and Sir George Jeffreys,¹ come on the scene in No. 121 in a very curious satire, in which Scroggs addresses Jeffreys on the conduct of the Court. It is evidently a parody of a speech which was made by Scroggs on the occasion of his taking his seat as Lord Chief Justice of the King's Bench. With No. 124, "An Answer to the Earl of Danby's paper touching the murder of Sir Edmondbury Godfrey," the Popish Plot with all its attendant horrors begins. The prints relating to it are many and varied in interest and importance. Executions of priests of the Church of Rome are related in Nos. 131, 132, 133; and the condemnation and execution of Viscount Stafford in Nos. 165 and 170. The speech made by the Earl of Shaftsbury (No. 180) on 20th November, 1680, received the not uncommon distinction, in those days, of being "burnt by the hand of the common hangman," as mentioned in a manuscript note in a contemporary hand. Its outspoken nature, demanding that there "must be, in plain English, a change; we must neither have Popish wife, nor Popish favourite, nor Popish mistress, nor Popish councillor at Court, or any new convert,"

cannot have failed to make the writing particularly obnoxious to the Government. The distrust with which James, Duke of York, was regarded produced much discussion on the succession to the Crown. To mention only a few of the entries which more or less deal with that question: in No. 200 we have an imaginary conversation between the Duke of York and the Parliament; No. 202, a paper entitled "Vox Populi, Vox Dei," in which the voice of the people is asserted to be "No Popish Successor;" and the various petitions, some for and some against the policy of the Government. Plot succeeds plot, and in No. 226 we have "A New Discovery of the Sham-Presbyterian Plot," a curious paper in which James Carol accuses Lamport, an Irish Papist, of having endeavoured to suborn him. The executions of Edward Fitzharris, of Oliver Plunket, the titular Primate of Ireland, and of Stephen College, are related in various broadsheets under the year 1681. In Nos. 231 to 234 we have a curious series of lampoons on the infamous Titus Oates, whose downfall in the reign of James II. and partial recovery of favour after the Revolution can be traced by referring to his name in the index. Other broadsides on this subject will be found by referring to the Catalogue of English Ballads. The taking away of the Charter of the City of London by Charles II., an oppressive measure which led to great dissatisfaction, can be studied in Nos. 273, 274, 291 and 292, and the interference of the Court in the election of sheriffs finds frequent mention in the entries during the years 1682 and 1683. With the discovery of the Rye-House Plot we have a series of prints of considerable historical importance. The first, No. 294, "The Hue and Cry after James, Duke of Monmouth, Lord Grey and Sir Thomas Armstrong," was evidently printed immediately after the publication of the Proclamation for apprehending the three conspirators named on this sheet. The places in which search is to be made for them indicate the scant measure of respect in which they were held. The trials, executions and other papers on this plot will be found under Nos. 295 to 303, and reappear in Nos. 324, 328, 329, which relate to the apprehension, sentence and execution of Sir Thomas Armstrong. The war carried on by the Turks against the Emperor of Germany is the subject of Nos. 304 to 306, which are narratives of the siege of Vienna; No. 331, a letter from the King of Poland, who is setting out with a large army to attack the Turks; No. 332, an account of the taking of Barthfeld by the Christians; and No. 340, a relation of a victory over Count Teckely, and of a battle fought between the Duke of Lorraine and Serasquier Bassa, before Buda.

The reign of James II. has been already referred to as containing the continuation of the series of broadsides on Titus Oates. It is further remarkable for that on the rising in the West of England in favour of the Duke of Monmouth. This mushroom rebellion was answerable for much paper and print, and perhaps one of the most valuable is the broadside No. 376, which is Monmouth's letter to the Duke of Albemarle requesting him to render himself at his camp and recognise him as king in succession to Charles II. Albemarle's answer is a refusal to recognise any other than James II. as his lawful sovereign. The future proceedings against the rebels, which will be handed down to all time as the "Bloody Assize," are related in Nos. 380, 384 to 387, and 404. There is little calling for special notice until we come to the end of the reign of James II. The paper entitled "Character," No. 440, an eulogy of William, Prince of Orange, is rapidly followed by prints issued by that Prince, or by his friends, on his landing in England. The letters by Prince George of Denmark and Lord Churchill (No. 455), addressed to James II., and of the Princess Anne of Denmark (No. 456) to the Queen, her mother, are historical documents of interest and recognised value. The withdrawal of the King from Rochester (No. 466) is the first entry dealing with affairs in England during the period of Interregnum. This is followed by one of many publications contained in this collection from the pen of that curious "mixture of benevolence and madness," Mrs. Eleanor James, who alternately praised, coaxed and scolded the Parliaments and reigning sovereigns, from Charles II. to George I. In this one (No. 467) she professes a desire that the Prince of Orange should unchain the King from the Popish yoke and restore him to the Church of England. It will be unnecessary to allude again to the productions of Mrs. James, the full list of which can be seen by referring to the index. The Convention, and the important questions of the vacancy of the throne, and whether the Crown was to be conferred on the Prince and Princess of Orange jointly, or only on one of them, are the subjects of Nos. 478 to 504, which last is followed by a letter from William (No. 505) intimating to the States-General of the United Provinces that he and Mary have been proclaimed King and Queen of England.

The entries under the reign of William and Mary and of William III. are so numerous that we can only refer briefly to a few of the more interesting.

The miserable end of Judge Jeffreys finds a place in Nos. 527 to 529, the last of which gives an account of his remarkable career—"In little more than seven years" he had mounted "from a Finsbury Petty-fogger to a Lord High Chancellor of England." The stand made in Ireland by King James II. is the subject of many of the broadsides from No. 540 onwards. Of these we have, in 541 and 542, interesting accounts of the siege of Londonderry; in 544, of the battle of Newton Butler; in 549, of the success of the Irish under Sarsefield at James-Town; in 566, of the battle of Beltarbet; and in 581 and 582 two accounts of the decisive victory gained by William at the passage of the Boyne, which, although it resulted in the flight of King James to Dublin, cost the victorious army their great general, the Duke of Schomberg, who was killed in the battle. The wars, both on land and at sea, carried on against the Continental powers are the subjects of many entries in this reign. Nos. 637 to 640 refer to the engagement off Cape La Hogue, and in No. 654 we have a list of the vessels in the combined English and Dutch fleets, with their armaments and the number of seamen on each. The battle of Landen, where William III. was defeated by Marshal Luxemburg, the commander of the French forces, is related in No. 660, and the taking of Namur in No. 686. The Assassination Plot is the subject of Nos. 697 to 701; No. 698 being the text of "The Association," or engagement, which all office-holders under Government were required to enter into, having for its object the defence of the King and the discovery of the plotters.

In this reign the entries dealing with trade and commerce are much more numerous than hitherto. The disastrous Darien Scheme is the subject of five or six entries, beginning with No. 702. The various proposals of a chimerical nature put forth by Chamberlain and Briscoe for a Land Bank are met with in Nos. 667 and several other numbers. The scarcity of money in 1695-6 is dealt with in several schemes, such as No. 689, "The Mint and Exchequer United," and No. 712, "Some reasons for the speedy opening of the Mint." Lotteries are the subject of Nos. 690 to 692; life insurance of No. 735; and fire insurance of No. 773. The unpopularity of William III. with his subjects is strikingly brought out in No. 807, "Some Remarks upon our Affairs." The writer remarks that William "is avaricious of our money, and as lavish in laying it out, and lets the trade of England sink . . . he is sour, silent, sullen and almost insolent ; to be sure unmannerly, for there is a decorum even due from kings. . . .”

A foremost place should be allowed in the reign of Queen Anne to the broadsides relating to the foreign wars. The interesting series of newsletters give many particulars of the progress of affairs abroad, while other sheets contain more minute accounts of various engagements, such as the Expresses from the Duke of Marlborough, Nos. 870 and 873, one giving the victory gained at Donauwerth and the other at Blenheim. The Union of Scotland with England produced quite a crop of petitions, addresses, speeches and letters, a fair number of which will be found between Nos. 921 and 937, and bear witness to a high state of tension in the feelings of many classes of Scotsmen. The Scottish broadsides in this reign relating to both ecclesiastical and civil affairs are well represented, perhaps the most interesting being Nos. 900, 948 and (in a later reign) 1175, all referring to the publication of Anderson's "Diplomata;" Nos. 991 and 992, which give respectively "The Case of James Greenshields" and "The Defence of the Magistrates of Edinburgh, and Lords of Session, against the Appeal of Greenshields." This was a cause célèbre in which the penal laws against the Episcopal Clergy in Scotland were enforced, and Greenshields imprisoned for reading the Liturgy in a private house in Edinburgh. There are several Acts issued by the Edinburgh municipal authorities, such as No. 860, against adultery; No. 861, against playing at cards and dice; and No. 990, for regulating the price of bread.

Sacheverell's trial is the subject of a group beginning with No. 979, a ticket of admission to Westminster Hall; Nos. 980 and 982 are lists of the Peers who gave judgment in the trial, and of the Commons who voted the impeachment of Sacheverell; while No. 981 is a lampoon on the burning of his writings, by Resolution of Parliament. Nos. 983 and 997 have reference, one to the condemnation of Sacheverell and the other to his visit to Worcester, where he was received with great warmth by the clergy, which brought down on them the wrath of Lloyd, the Bishop of Worcester, and of his son, who was Chancellor of the Diocese.

The disgrace of the Duke and Duchess of Marlborough is the subject of No. 1040, "The Case of a British General," No. 1041, "S——h and J——n beg Pardon for what they have done," and No. 1048, "The D——e and D——s of M——h's Loss;" the last-mentioned is estimated at £62,325 per annum. The celebrated and doubly fatal duel between the Duke of Hamilton and Lord Mohun will be found referred to under Nos. 1073 and 1075; and the Mohocks and Hawkubites, a society of disorderly fellows who rendered life in London unsafe through their debaucheries and disturbances, are considered, in No. 1081, by a Reverend Divine to be the Gog and Magog of the Apocalypse.

Under the reign of George I. the first serious attempt of the Jacobites to place the princes of the House of Stuart again on the throne of Great Britain and Ireland occupies a foremost place. The rebellion of 1715 is foreshadowed in No. 1116, an address from the Lord Provost and Council of Edinburgh to George I., probably presented in December, 1714, in which they declare their firm determination to sacrifice their lives and fortunes in his defence, and to maintain the succession of the House of Hanover. This is followed by a "Declaration of the Free Holders of Great Britain, in answer to that of the Pretender" (No. 1118), curiously dated "Jan. 19 In the Second Year of our publick Happiness. It is evidently a reply to the Declaration by Prince James, dated 3rd January, 1714-5, put forth to remove all objections and resolving never to abandon his rights to the throne. Lord Boling-broke's Letter of 27th March, 1715, of which there are two editions (Nos. 1122, 1123), is also worthy of notice. Two days before writing this letter Bolingbroke left London in disguise, fearing arrest for treasonable correspondence with the Court at St. Germain. He excuses his flight on the grounds that he had no hope of a fair and open trial. The course of the rising may be traced in No. 1126, a circular letter in which the inhabitants in and about Edinburgh state that they have engaged themselves in a bond of association to assist one another in resisting and opposing all attempts to disturb the Government; No. 1127, in which the Presbyterian Ministers in the north of Ireland exhort the people to quit themselves like men and resist the threatened invasion; and No. 1128, a letter written by a Lancashire Quaker, named Gabriel Dutton, to William Bradine, a clothier in Berwick, where the advice is of quite another character, being a singular example of the policy of non-resistance as taught by the Society of Friends. The writer bids the recipient keep his garments clean, and not to trouble himself whether Rehoboam or Jeroboam the Son of Nebat be the Ruler. Nos. 1129 and 1130 are papers issued, the former by the Synod of Perth and Stirling, and the latter by the Synod of Mers and Teviotdale, against the Prince and his followers. No. 1131 is a letter from the Duke of Ormond, who states that on the death of Queen Anne he was obliged to fly from his native country, but now returns to take his post as Commander-in-Chief of all the forces to which he has been commissioned by King James III. In the next, No. 1132, we have the only account in the collection of active hostilities, an engagement fought near Dunblane on 13th November, 1715, in which neither side gained any important advantage. The left wing of the rebels gave way, but in return their right wing, where were the Clans, dislodged the royal troops. In No. 1133 we have "A Speech intended to have been spoken" by three of the victims of this rebellion, who were executed at Tyburn on 7th December, 1715. The next two entries (Nos. 1134, 1135) refer to the addresses of the Episcopal Clergy of Aberdeen, and of the Magistrates and Town Council of that city, to the Pretender. Each is accompanied with "Remarks" by a writer on the other side. The last entry of this group, which may be said to represent the rebellion in its activity, is No. 1136, an Admonition by the Synods of Glasgow and Ayr in which they urge their people to stand by the Government and resist the rebels under the Popish Pretender.

Although crushed, the Jacobite spirit was elastic, and many secretly printed papers bear witness to the discontent with the House of Hanover, which still prevailed. The two broadsides, Nos. 1142 and 1143, may possibly have been circulated before or during the rebellion, but for convenience they are noticed here. The former, "The Character of Sultan Galga, the present Cham of Tartary," is a lampoon on George I., whose personality is thinly veiled under the name of Sultan Galga; the latter, a reprint of a celebrated "Address to Oliver Cromwell," by Colonel Silas Titus, was evidently circulated by the Jacobites as an incentive to the assassination of George I. In No. 1149, "The Translation of an old imperfect Greek Manuscript found in Wales," the career of Prince James is told in allegory. Jupiter quarrelled with Juno, and Vulcan interposed, but as a result the God of Fire was thrown out of Heaven. The conclusion is very plain speaking and can refer to no other person than James III.: "Being on earth, he fell into strange company; half-sighted people with one eye, which being in the middle of their foreheads, left them no room for brains. By these he was worshipp'd, adored, and still call'd a pretty fellow, tho' they had most of them been ministers of his pretended Father's cruelty, forging bolts of thunder for him."

With No. 1151 we come to the impeachment of the rebel lords, which subject is continued in No. 1154, the speech of the Earls of Carnwath and Derwentwater, two of their number. The paper, No. 1156, contains the reasons why the Earl of Derwentwater thought he might have given scandal to the people of England by pleading guilty at his trial, and No. 1157 is a paper delivered by Lord Kenmure on the day of his execution. Other victims of the '15 are the subjects of Nos. 1160 and 1162. The last named is a paper of some interest, as it is an appeal to mercy of no fewer than thirteen men who allege that force was used by the rebels to compel them to march with the army of the Prince.

No. 1165 is the earliest of an interesting and possibly unique collection of broadside Aberdeen Prognostications or Almanacs. The series includes ten different years, extending from 1717 to 1742. For further particulars on the subject of these very rare prints, the compiler refers the reader to his work on "The Aberdeen Printers."

The quarrel between the King and the Prince of Wales, afterwards George II., finds a place in No. 1173. The occasion was the christening of the Prince's second son. "The Prince, shaking his fist in the Duke of Newcastle's face, called him a rogue, and provoked his august father." The Prince and Princess were turned out of St. James's Palace, and their children taken from them by order of the King. The broadside contains the royal order, a letter sent to all Foreign Ministers, the King's account of the Prince's behaviour, and a letter to the King from the Prince.

With more peaceful times at home we enter upon a series dealing mostly with commerce. Nos. 1197 to 1199 relate to the insurance of ships and merchandise, and No. 1208 to fire insurance. No. 1213 is a letter on the affairs of the South Sea Company, demanding that Knight, the absconding treasurer of the company, should be brought home. Nos. 1219 and 1230 both refer to the celebrated Bishop Atterbury, who took a prominent part in the Jacobite conspiracy of 1722-3. There is rather an interesting group of Irish broadsides, Nos. 1232, 1245 to 1247, 1251 and 1253, all dealing with Wood's brass half-pence and farthings. William Wood had received a patent from the Government to coin and issue in Ireland and America copper or brass coins, and this measure met with such determined resistance that they had to be withdrawn. The strenuous nature of the opposition is shown in these prints. The collecting of the malt-tax in Scotland had always been a difficult matter for the officers of the excise since the Union, and disturbances which resulted at Glasgow and elsewhere are recorded in Nos. 1260 and 1261, the last being a circular from the Convention of Royal Burghs intimating their abhorrence of the thought of resisting the law. No. 1262 is a curious Act by the Lords of Council and Session, "for preventing the want or scarcity of Ale or Beer, and Bread in Edinburgh," and seems to have been put forth in consequence of these riots. The last broadside under this reign to which we shall refer is No. 1278, "the Order observed at the Ceremonial of delivering the Ensigns of the Order of the Thistle to James, Duke of Hamilton." The interesting manuscript note in an old handwriting referring to a later investiture is worth perusal although too long to repeat here.

The broadsides deserving of special notice are equally numerous in the reign of George II. as in that of his father. No. 1299, "The Norfolk Congress," is a satire on Sir Robert Walpole's retirement to Houghton Hall, after the Congress of Soissons. Another political lampoon (No. 1302), entitled "A Copy of a Paper drop'd in St. James's-Park," is not so easy of explanation. The second title, "A Hue and Cry after a Coachman," who goes by the name of Brazen Face, seems to point to a Minister, probably Sir Robert Walpole. He is said to have formerly served a widow lady of the first rank, and afterwards was employed by his late mistress's successor, who was a perfect stranger to his wicked and corrupt practices. With No. 1312 we come to the last broadside in the collection dealing with the imprisonment of certain men who were committed to Newgate in 1696, for complicity in Porter's Plot, which had for its object the assassination of King William III. In the first print dealing with this case (No. 908), issued in 1705, six men appealed to Queen Anne to be set at liberty, as they had never been tried, but were kept in prison by Act of Parliament, renewed again and again. Ten years later (No. 1137) five of them petitioned Parliament, the sixth having been set at liberty by Queen Anne. In 1727 (No. 1286) three of their number again petitioned for release. Since the previous petition was sent up, two of them had died in Newgate. And now, in 1729, Robert Blackburne, the last of the six, after an imprisonment of nearly thirty-three years, appeals to George II. for relief. Nos. 1324 and 1326 deal with the affairs of the Charitable Corporation, a company established for lending money on pledges, but which came to a disastrous end. In the last of the two broadsides, Giovanni Angelo Belloni writes that Thomson, one of the officers of the concern, who had escaped, was arrested on his arrival in Rome. His papers, letters and minutes were seized, and would be given up to the Parliamentary Committee upon their consenting to certain conditions. This letter was burnt by order of Parliament by the hands of the common hangman.

With No. 1330 we again come upon the exiled Stuarts in "A Letter to Prince James Sobieski." It is a reply said to have been written by Prince James Francis Edward Stuart to a communication from his father-in-law on the election of a new King of Poland. The Prince cannot accept the Crown if it should be offered to him, as his own country engages his whole heart and all his inclinations, the law and interests of which have been his principal study. He regrets that his son, the Duke of York, is not of an age to be a candidate. An extraordinary letter from the pen of the mad Lord Roseberry will be found under No. 1338, appended to which is a manuscript note, probably by Mr. James Maidment.

History repeats itself. Under the previous reign we drew attention to the quarrel of George I. with the Prince of Wales. That Prince became George II., and he in like manner had a violent rupture with his eldest son, Frederick, Prince of Wales. The "royal row," as Thackeray characterised these domestic events, is the subject of Nos. 1349 and 1350. The Prince removed the Princess, his wife, from Hampton Court to the empty palace of St. James's, on the evening of 11th August, 1737, when she was on the point of giving birth to her first child. The relations between the King and the Prince had been very strained previous to that event, and the squabble which took place was so acute that they never met again. In the first of these broadsides a number of messages and letters are printed; the second contains the King's intimation to the Prince that he must leave St. James's Palace with all his family, when it can be done without prejudice or inconvenience to the Princess. For the present the Princess was to have the care of the infant.

The "Porteous Mob" will probably live longer in the memory of English-speaking people than any similar disturbance, through having been so dramatically narrated by Sir Walter Scott in the Heart of Midlothian. No. 1355 relates to the trial of Thomas Lining, one of the suspected rioters. Scott in one of the notes to his novel mentions this trial, and adds that the accused was acquitted.

It was singular that although so many were concerned in the plot and in carrying out the murder of Captain Porteous, two men only were brought to trial, of whom Linning or Linnen was one, but the verdict was the same in both cases—not guilty. While we are on Scottish ground mention may be made of No. 1363, an “Act of the Presbytery of Edinburgh against the profanation of the Lord’s Day.” In the light of present-day freedom it is amusing to observe that the Presbytery protests against diversions and recreations, standing in companies in the streets, pastimes and plays of children, giving and receiving visits, gazing from windows, walking through the fields, washing and swimming in waters and rivers, unnecessary shaving, and carrying of dressed wigs through the streets.

The time-honoured custom of “riding the marches” of a city was usually the occasion of a pageant varying in extent according to the importance of the place. No. 1364, “The Whole Order and Procession,” relates to the ceremony as observed in Dublin in the year 1740, when the four-and-twenty corporations of the city, arrayed in their various colours, visited each boundary mark. With No. 1379 the scene shifts to the Continent, and in that broadside we have an account of the battle of Fontenoy, and of the defeat of the Allied Forces by the French.

The reputation which Edinburgh had deservedly earned for filthy streets in which it was unsafe to walk has been the theme of remarks by travellers, historians and novelists. The warning cry, a curious survival of the Franco-Scottish alliance, which the inhabitants uttered before casting their filth from the windows of the houses into the streets, may have ceased to have been used, but, in No. 1380, an “Act of Council for keeping clean the streets of Edinburgh,” we have unmistakable evidence that that dirty custom still prevailed. A fine of six marks Scots will be imposed on each offender ; for a second offence the person shall stand in the pillory for two hours, and for a third offence shall be whipt by the hangman and banished the city.

The rebellion of 1745 is but feebly represented in the collection, but some papers of interest on that subject will be found under 1381 and following numbers. Three of them are Acts of the General Assembly and of the Presbytery of Edinburgh, appointing days of fasting on account of the rising, and a fourth, an Act of the General Assembly, appoints a day of thanksgiving for its suppression. Nos. 1383 and 1385, containing, the former, a "Journal of the Marches of the Prince Regent's Army," and the latter, two accounts of the battle of Falkirk, are of some interest. Their value has been lessened in the eyes of the compiler since he ascertained that these are not the original broadsides, printed by the rebels at their press which travelled with the army, but only reprints which were appended to "A Full Collection of all the Proclamations and Orders Published by the Authority of Charles Prince of Wales . . .," two parts, and published at Glasgow in 1745-6. The misfortunes of Prince James and of his father James II. are the subject of No. 1388, "A Letter to the author of the National Journal," signed Ithacus, and dated 10th June, 1746, the birthday of the Prince. One of the most remarkable prints in the collection is (No. 1392) a letter which purports to have been written by Frederick the Great to the Young Chevalier on his safe arrival in France after the defeat of Culloden. A very long note is appended to the entry in the catalogue, which fully explains the nature of the letter and the circumstances of its publication.

Two more entries under this reign deserve mention. No. 1393, "Resolutions of His Majesty's most excellent Blue-Gowns," recalls to mind Edie Ochiltree in Sir Walter Scott's Antiquary. A Bill had been introduced into Parliament anent the Poor's Tax, and, if it should pass, the Blue-Gowns would have the sole and exclusive privilege of begging. The prospect of this monopoly pleases them so highly that they agree to petition the King and Parliament on behalf of the measure. No. 1397, "The Petition of the Grave and venerable Bellmen (or Sextons) of the Church of Scotland," is a facetious paper in which they petition the House of Commons for an increase of salary. The clergy and schoolmasters having applied to Parliament for an augmentation of their stipends, the bellmen considering that they too are ecclesiastical persons think they cannot do better than follow suit.

The broadsides of the time of George III. will be found to be less interesting, and, with some exceptions, less important than in the two previous reigns. A number of curious papers relating to parliamentary elections in Edinburgh will be found under Nos. 1416 to 1424, and a longer series, numbered from 1426 to 1437, referring to a dispute about the patent for the Edinburgh theatre. The discontent which prevailed owing to the heavy taxes, and the alarm at the growth of the National Debt, are shown in No. 1442, a letter signed "A South Briton." The writer, who is evidently a Jacobite, prophesies that the taxes, which "now amount to fifteen shillings in the pound, three parts of our whole property . . . and as the K—— goes on, the remaining fourth must soon follow." Nothing calls for special mention until we come to Nos. 1460 to 1464, all broadsides dealing with the Irish rebellion of 1798. The first contains an account of the apprehension of Lord Edward Fitzgerald, one of the leaders in the rising; the second, of an attack upon the town of Naas by the rebels, who were successfully repulsed; the third, of several engagements, in all of which the rebels were the losers; the fourth, of a defeat of 5000 rebels by 1100 Government troops; and the last, a declaration explanatory of the term Irish Papists, put forth originally in 1641, and probably reprinted during the rebellion of 1798.

Perhaps one of the largest groups in the whole collection is that relating to the threatened invasion of England by Napoleon Bonaparte in 1803. The series extends from Nos. 1472 to 1546, and consists largely of patriotic addresses. They may have served a useful purpose at the time, but these addresses are heavy reading at the present day. Here and there are prints from which a little amusement may be derived, but the writers were in such deadly earnest that it appears almost sacrilege to look for anything that may provoke a smile. The epitaph on Bonaparte (No. 1492) is worth mentioning. It relates that "underneath this dunghill is all that remains of a mighty conqueror, Napoleon Buonaparte. . . . Providence at last, wearied out with his crimes, returned him to the dunghill from whence he sprung, . . . this beech, the only spot in our Isle polluted by his footsteps : this dunghill, all that remains to him of his boasted conquest." The mock play-bill, No. 1516, and the bill (No. 1520) offering £20,000 for the body of Bonaparte are also instances of the humorous side of this collection.

The Westminster election of 1806, in which Paull, Sheridan and Hood were the candidates, the last two being elected, forms the subject of Nos. 1548 to 1577. A second contest took place in the following year, in which Paull was again defeated, but this time by Sir Francis Burdett and Lord Cochrane. This second election is represented by Nos. 1578 to 1583. The sad end of James Paull is told in No. 1584. His mind was unhinged, and having lost 1600 guineas at the Union, a gaming-house in Pall Mall, on the 14th April, 1808, the following day he deliberately committed suicide in his house in Charles Street, St. James's Square. Burdett's imprisonment in the Tower, ostensibly for breach of privilege, but really on account of his determined efforts to obtain some measure of reform, is referred to in No. 1586. It is a speech delivered by Sir Francis Burdett to Mr. Sheriff Wood when he waited upon him with the thanks and resolutions of the Common Hall. Another Westminster election, that of 1818, in which the candidates were Burdett, Romilly, Maxwell, and Hunt, and which terminated in the return of the two first-named, will be found under Nos. 1597 to 1605. This seems to be an appropriate place to explain that, in connection with these contests, a few portraits of the candidates and caricatures have been introduced in illustration of the events. They have no proper claim to be considered as broadsides, and their appearance is apologised for and explained.

Nos. 1607 and 1608 both refer to the Manchester massacre of 1819 (called also Peterloo). The former is an account of a meeting, with Sir Francis Burdett in the chair, in which the late riots are mentioned and the conduct of the military condemned ; the latter is the programme of a procession into London of Hunt, who presided at the Manchester reform meeting.

The reign of George IV. opens with a solitary broadside (No. 1610) of the Westminster Election of 1820. It is succeeded by three on the Chartist movement :—No. 1611, an “Address to the inhabitants of Great Britain and Ireland,” in which all are requested to strike work on 1st April, and to remain idle until they are in possession of those rights which distinguish the freeman from the slave ; No. 1612, an account of a disturbance at Glasgow ; and No. 1613, the “Plan of Bonnymuir,” where the Radicals made a stand against a body of cavalry on the 5th April, 1820.

There is only one broadside in the collection relating to the trial of Caroline, Queen Consort of George IV. (No. 1614), “Proceedings on the evidence of Barbara Crantz, and speech of Mr. Brougham.” Although in a humbler sphere of life reference may be made here to other broadsides on the relations of husband and wife. Nos. 1625 and 1656 are instances of wife-selling, while No. 1631 is an account of a woman selling her husband.

The broadside, No. 1659, "Mansie Waugh's Dream, concerning the execution of Burke," brings to mind the crimes of William Burke and Hare his associate, and the horrors of the resurrectionists. Another dreadful crime, known as the Gilmerton murder, is detailed in No. 1661 and other twelve broadsides.

Little calls for notice in the reign of William IV. Nos. 1691 and 1692 give the arrangements for the opening of London Bridge by William IV. and his Queen Consort. Nos. 1697 and 1698 contain accounts of the riots at Bristol on the occasion of the public entry into that city of Sir Charles Wetherell, the Recorder, and a bitter opponent of reform. No. 1699 refers to a great reform meeting held at Durham, and the agitation for reform is also the subject of Nos. 1701, 1702, and 1703. No. 1712 is a contribution to the early history of Trades Unions. Six agricultural labourers of Dorchester had been sentenced to seven years' transportation for administering to other agricultural labourers a certain oath not required and sanctioned by law. The broadside is an account of a meeting at which a petition was drawn up on behalf of these men, requesting a strict investigation into the circumstances. Lord Melbourne, however, declined to receive the petition in the way it had been presented, as a great procession accompanied it. The next entry, No. 1713, a parody on the Church Catechism, "to be learned by every member of the Trades Union," probably relates to the same event as the entry immediately preceding.

The issue of these senseless, blasphemous parodies seems to have continued for a considerable time. Further examples of them will be found in this reign under No. 1716, a parody on the Order for Morning Prayer, and No. 1718, a parody on the Baptismal Office.

The reign of Queen Victoria is but meagrely represented. Nos. 1726 and 1727 are speeches by the Queen on closing and opening Parliament; No. 1728, a reprint in facsimile of the State procession at the coronation ; and No. 1733, an account of the preparations for her marriage with Prince Albert. More parodies on the Offices and Catechism of the Church of England will be found under Nos. 1730, 1731, 1737, 1739, 1750, 1756, and 1763, when it is to be hoped they died a natural death. The opening of the Thames Tunnel is commemorated in No. 1743, a paper printed "76 feet below high-water mark." It contains a view of the tunnel and a description of the work.

The revolution in Paris of 1848 is narrated in No. 1764, and the fear of invasion of this country by Napoleon III. is the subject of a curious broadside, No. 1773, entitled "The Expected French Invasion, or the Hero of a Hundred Statues and his Dupes." In the woodcut which heads this sheet, the Iron Duke is represented on an ass, addressing an army of police-constables, tailors, chimney-sweeps, cab-drivers, scavengers, &c., drawn up in two lines, with cannon in front labelled "Times," "Chronicle," &c. Four tubs are sailing in the straits behind Wellington, three of which are named "The Bright," "The Hume," and "The Cobden." On the French shore Napoleon III. is looking across to England through a telescope, attended by two soldiers, one of whom carries an eagle and the other a cock as standards. The Crimean war is represented by three broadsides. The first, No. 1779, an account of the landing of the forces and of the battle of Alma ; the second, No. 1783, of the destruction and burning of Sveaborg, a fortress in Finland ; and the last, No. 1786, the Official Programme of a display of Fireworks on the occasion of the Peace.

It is hoped that these remarks may in some measure indicate the varied and interesting character of the collection. Their perusal may also lead to a closer study and more extensive use of the catalogue.

A complaint was made to the Parliament against monopolies, whereupon the Queen issued a proclamation declaring many of those licenses and patents void, upon which the Commons were now come to return her their hearty thanks. The Queen in reply says she is grateful that the knowledge of these things is come to her from them.

64.—A True Copy of the Letter sent from the Lord Mayor, Aldermen and Common-Council, at a Common-Council holden at Guildhall London, on the 29th of December, 1659. Directed to the Right Honorable George Moncke, General of the Forces in Scotland.

London, Printed in the Year of our Lord, 1659.

Fol. R. L.

In reply to Monk's letter of 12th Nov. Their delay in replying was caused by doubts as to the authenticity of the letter, and by the interposition of the forces which lay in the road to Monk. They cordially agree with the objects Monk wishes to attain and refer him to a Declaration which they enclose.

65.—A Declaration Of all the Watermen In and about the City of London, between Gravesend and Stanes. Or, A Hue and Cry attter Col. Whitton and his Decoys.

No imprint. [London, 1659.]

Fol. R. L.

Col. Whitton obtained the names of the Watermen to a petition to Parliament, under the pretence that it was to put down Hackney Coachmen. It being discovered, they addressed themselves to Mr. Prynne, who drew up this Declaration to the effect that they could not be satisfied until the nation has its just rights in a full and free Parliament. The date, 1659, is taken from a contemporary MS. endorsement.

66.—A Letter To his Excellency The Lord General Monck.

[Signed] T. S

London, Printed in the Year, 1659.

Fol. R. L.

The writer gives an account of what has happened "since Lambert's last interrupting that which so daringly assumes the name of a Parliament." He refers to Monk having provoked the Parliament by fixing upon them a character in his speech "which the whole body of our language cannot equal, and they can never forgive or forget, for it will live as long as the name of Rump that spawn'd them." He calls upon him to deliver the nation from these tyrants.

By Anthony Ashley Cooper, Earl of Shaftsbury, Nov. 20, 1680.

Against the arbitrary proceedings of the King, and pointing out the future danger the country may run from the Duke of York. The writer declares that there "must be, in plain English, a change; we must neither have Popish wife, nor Popish favourite, nor Popish mistress, nor Popish councillor at Court, or any new convert." He reviews the events that have taken place since the Restoration, and finds great cause for distrusting the King. A MS. note quoting from "The London Gazette," Number 1579, states "London Jan. 4th. This day by order of ye house of Lds, was burnt by ye hand of ye comon Hangman before ye Royal Exchange and in ye Palace Yard a Paper intituled A Speech lately made by a Noble Peer of this realm, being a scandalous Libell."

Written after the proclamation of 28th June for apprehending Monmouth, Grey and Armstrong for participation in the Rye-House Plot. Search for the Duke is to be made not in the Cock-pit nor in the Council, but at Sir W. P——y's and at the Countess of S——d's; and if he is not there, search in Lady G——y's Placket. Lord Grey will probably be caught with a near relation of her Ladyship's. Sir Thomas Armstrong is not to be found in Church or Conventicle, but with a common whore at Stratfords or a holy sister at Wapping preaching liberty of conscience to the saints.

Fol. R. L.

Great disappointment is expressed at the results of the Revolution. The writer never could have imagined that the Prince of Orange would have fallen into the same evil courses as his father-in-law and considers King William's Ministers as objectionable as those of the late King. He writes "It is an Act to be repented of, that we did not make ourselves as secure at Rochester this time twelvemonth as we did formerly. If a King is Impunible, we ought all to have subscribed to Passive Obedience." This would indicate the date of printing to be about Dec. 1689, or a year after the flight of James II.

Many clergy, in reduced circumstances on account of the late disbanding of the land and sea forces, are to be found in these kingdoms, especially in England. The writer thinks that instead of the Bishops entertaining so many of "the Pope's out-cast," they should in charity take care of the English clergy. He adverts to the small number of converts from Popery during the late reign, while there seemed to be any chance of the Church of Rome becoming the established religion.

London: Printed for E. Mallet, next the King's-Arms-Tavern, near Fleet-Bridge. 1701.

Fol. 2 pp. 2 cols. R. L.

The charges brought against the Parliament were these :—1. That they have been dilatory and backward in the service of the nation; 2. That they have prosecuted private animosities to the detriment of the public; 3. That they have usurped an arbitrary and tyrannical power over the liberties of the people. The writer stoutly defends them and warns the people that care must be taken lest the next Parliament, “under pretence of zeal for the Government, gives up our Civil Rights, which some have lately attempted by voting for Standing Armies.”

807.—Some Remarks upon our Affairs.

Finis.

No imprint. [? London, ? 1701.]

Fol. 2 pp. 2 cols. R. L.

The remarks are those of an opponent to the Government and he does not spare King William III. in his review of the affairs of the nation. He writes “he is avaricious of our money, and as lavish in laying it out, and lets the trade of England sink; he is fond of an Army, which is the prænatural Force of England, and suffers dilapidations in its Naval Walls; . . . he is sour, silent, sullen, and almost insolent; to be sure unmannerly, for there is a decorum even due from Kings . . .”

The following curious MS. note is appended to it. “Att Edinburgh the 15th of March this present 170 $\frac{3}{4}$ There was a Procession by order of Privy Councill from the Low-Councill House after this manner. One of the Towne Officers carryed on the top of his Halbert the picture of our Blessed Saviour on the Cross in Tallie-douce and after him came the Hangman and his man arraid in Priests Habits or Vestments with Crucifixes on their foreheads, and all the rest of the Towne Officers carryed every one of them something. In this manner they came to the Market Cross, & in presence of all the Market People the Hangman burnt our Saviours Picture, the vulgar Latin Bible, the Priests Vestments, the Crucifixes, the consecrated Wafers, and the Chalice or Comunion Cup they did beat the sides of it together, and threw it in the fire, and after it had been sometime in the fire they took it out again being Silver, and pretended they would give that to the poor.”

The qualifications necessary for Members "fit to do the business of England in the ensuing Parliament" are stated. Besides integrity of mind, a stout heart, and a good understanding it is desirable that they should be "Landed Men" and not those whose Estates are made up of "Stocks, Companies and Funds." Parliament was dissolved on the 5th April, and a new Parliament was to meet on the 14th June, but it was not until the 25th October that the meeting actually took place. The date of the above print is probably May, 1705.

Fol. R. L.

The Kirk being vacant the Presbytery called Mr. John Webster to be Minister, thus taking the appointment unjustly out of the hands of the Petitioners who have called Mr. Samuel Semple, Minister of Libertoun, to the charge. Mr. Semple, however, has declined to accept, and the Petitioners ask the Assembly to prevail with Mr. Semple, and if that should fail they will immediately apply to another qualified person. Mr. John Webster was admitted March 13th, 1705, and translated to New Deer, April 1707. On the death of Mr. John Milne, the previous Minister, in January 1703, Mr. Gideon Guthrie, an Episcopal clergyman, with connivance of Earl Marischal "intruded himself into the church and manse," and kept possession until May 1709, when by sentence of the Court of Justiciary he was ejected, so that it would appear that Webster was only nominally Minister of the Parish.

These proposals were made by Louis XIV. in 1706. Queen Anne was to be acknowledged, the Dutch to have the Barrier they demanded, Spain and the Indies to be surrendered to the Archduke Charles, Philip to have a kingdom in Italy consisting of Milan, Naples and Sicily. The terms were rejected by the Emperor and also by Marlborough and the war proceeded on its course.

962.—Proposal For Erecting Parochial Libraries In The Meanly endow'd Cures throughout England.

Fol. R. L.

There are in England above 2000 parishes where the annual income of the ministers does not exceed £30, and of those there are more than 1200 where it does not exceed £20, and nearly 500 where it does not exceed £10. The ministers of such meanly endowed churches must of necessity be in need of books to assist them in their duties. To supply this defect, parochial libraries, consisting each of the best commentaries on the Bible, and treatises on divinity, are to be established in those poor parishes. The trustees propose to erect at least 500 libraries, of which 52 are already nearly completed. An Act of Parliament has been passed in this session (1708) for the better preservation of parochial libraries, to secure them from embezzlement.

1712. 1091.—Some Queries proposed to Civil, Canon, and Common Lawyers. The Third Edition Printed in the Year MDC[C]XII [1712].

Fol. R. L.

All the queries refer to the legitimacy of James III., and are written by a Jacobite. The conclusion is "Whether has a Native Child of a Country, own'd by both Parents, &c., or a Foreign Child, born of a Woman, whose Husband was jealous of her, Separated from her, and confin'd her, the Best Title to Legitimacy?" The writer could only imagine one reply to his question.

1712. 1092.—To the Most Honourable the Peers of Great Britain, in Parliament Assembled. See Nos. 908, 1286, for other petitions from these prisoners. After having entered their prayer to be tried they were brought up the last day of the Michaelmas Term (probably in 1715) but the Court would neither bail nor discharge them. They protest their innocence and only desire a fair trial to make it appear.

At the foot of the sheet is a note "See what is said of this Address in the Earl of Clarendon's History of the Rebellion." "Killing noe Murder" was printed without place or date, but probably in 1657. The author Colonel Silas Titus, M.P., was a noted politician during the Commonwealth. His treatise is said to have struck such a terror into the mind of Cromwell as to have rendered the concluding part of his life miserable. This reprint of the Address was evidently circulated by the Jacobites during the reign of George I.

Fol. R. L.

James Ratcliffe, third and last Earl of Derwentwater, states that to plead guilty to an indictment of high treason, was to confess himself guilty of high treason for serving his King and country. He accepted the false and dishonourable plea as he had been led to believe that it was the only means to find mercy. He was beheaded on Tower-Hill, 24th Feby., 1715-6. Along with the broadsheet is a leading article from the "Daily Telegraph" of 16th Oct., 1874, giving an account of the sale of Dilton, the ancient seat of the Ratcliffe family, and the removal of the remains of six members of that family previous to the sale. The coffin containing the ashes of James, Earl of Derwentwater was re-interred in the family vault of Lord Petre, at Thorndon, in Essex.

Fol. R. L.

Congratulates the Young Pretender on his safe arrival in France. Was much touched with his misfortunes. Begs him to send his portrait by the Count de ——. Often talks of him with General Keith. A MS. copy of this extraordinary letter, in which it is represented as having been translated by Lord George Murray, was found within the leaves of an old Bible. The date of the MS. copy is November 8, 1746—not quite six months after the defeat of Culloden. The following particulars regarding the printed paper, possibly from the pen of Mr. Maidment, appeared in a journal. After reprinting the letter he continues:—

It is odd that this affectionate and confidential communication has the word "Prussia" at the end. It is not usual for monarchs to subscribe or superscribe papers of any kind after this fashion. Neither the kings of England, Scotland, nor France signed as "England," "Scotland," "France."

Now the letter and prefatory observation were printed and attempted to be circulated more than one hundred and twenty years ago. The writer has in his possession one of the printed copies seized by the order of the magistrates of Edinburgh on June 29, 1748; and the only difference of the slightest moment, between the original version and the modern copy, is the date—the former being "November the 8th, 1747," and the latter "November 8, 1746."

In consequence of intelligence received by the magistrates of Edinburgh that a document of a seditious tendency was privately in circulation, an inquiry was set on foot by them, and four witnesses were examined on the subject, whose depositions were to this effect:—

Upon June 29, 1748, John Loch, keeper of the Laigh coffee-house, was examined in presence of the Lord Provost and Magistrates. He deposed that he had seen the MS. of the letter three or four months previously—

"That being in his coffee-house this morning, between nine and ten o'clock, a boy, whom the declarant knows not, came into the coffee-house, and put into his hand four copies of a printed paper, which the declarant, without looking to, put into a press in the coffee-house where he keeps his sugar and coffee."

With a singular want of curiosity, he asserts he never looked into them, and could give no information about the boy who brought them. On the same day the constables came with a search warrant, when Loch put the papers into his pocket, refused to give them up, and only produced them when brought before the council. One copy was marked by the clerk of the Court, signed by Loch, authenticated by Bailie James Stewart, and is the one above referred to.

Patrick Arthur, "keeper of the British coffee-house," was next examined. He declared that the previous night, between the hours of nine and ten, a printer's boy with his apron on came to the coffee-house, and gave thirteen copies of the letter of the King of Prussia to the servants. These were delivered to him, whereupon they were instantly locked up, and shown to no person. He delivered the copies to the constables when they came, but could give no account of the printer's boy, as all he knew on the subject was communicated by his servant.

Next day brought out the name of the printer, who turned out to be Robert Drummond, whose apprentice, John Livingston, stated that one John Henderson brought the MS. to the printing house of his master, where it was printed.

David Ross, the pressman of Mr. Drummond, spoke as to the delivery of the MS. and the order by John Henderson to have it printed, which was obeyed, and five hundred copies thrown off and delivered to Henderson. He concluded his declaration by asserting "that Henderson, upon bringing the MS. to the printing house, say'd that he had got it from one Mrs. Nicol." Who this female was (if such a person did really exist) is not explained.

The seizure of this seditious fabrication was in June, 1748; and the paper printed is dated in Nov. 1747. The recently discovered MS., now reprinted, is dated in Nov. 1746.

It congratulates Prince Charles on his safe arrival in France, which occurred in that year, and the printed letter does the same a year later; whilst the deposition before the magistrates establishes that the MS. letter and introduction were not in type until May or June, 1748.

If genuine, this document is an early specimen of Prussian double-dealing, worthy of the present refined age. But we have no little difficulty in arriving at the conclusion that it is a fiction: one of those devices not unfrequently practised to influence the public mind, and prepare it for a subsequent rising. That the government, upon learning its existence, issued those orders to which the magistrates of Edinburgh gave effect, plainly evinces a belief that a new rebellion of the Jacobites was in contemplation.

Had the letter been a veritable one, it would never have been subscribed "Prussia."

Fol. R. L.

An attack upon the conduct of the Metropolitan Police during the months of October and November 1887, when they prevented the processions to and meetings in Trafalgar Square.

1888.

1806.—Captain John Welbe's Proposals For Establishing a Company by the name of the London Adventurers for carrying on a Trade to (and settling Colonies in) Terra Australis, and Working and Improving the Gold and Silver Mines which there abound.

[London.] Reprinted by E. A. P[etherick]. 1888.

8vo. R. L.

This proposal seems to have been made after 1706 for Welbe mentions the voyage of Dampier in that year. The editor has appended a note that neither this nor an earlier proposal had any result.

1888.

1807.—In the last year of the reign of James I., an eminent London merchant—probably the most enterprising English merchant of his time—Sir William Courteen, desiring to extend his trade to the Terra Australis, petitioned the King for the privilege of erecting Colonies therein . . . The following is a copy of his petition:— . . .
